
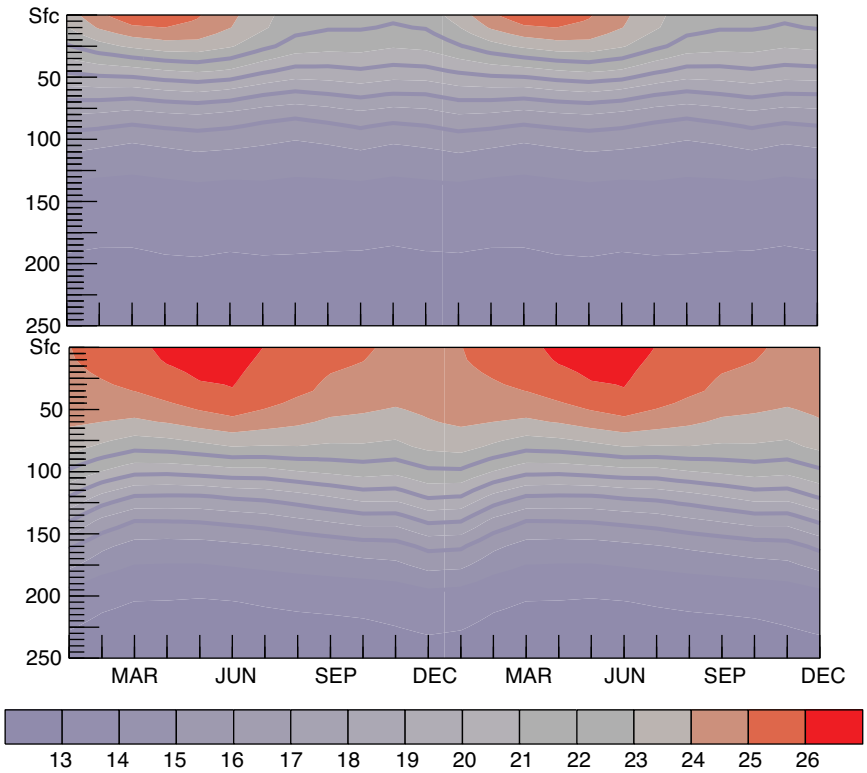

Figure 13. Depth-time sections of climatological mean temperature (°C) on the equator at 110°W (upper panel) and 140°W (lower panel) showing how the seasonal march tends to be much stronger near the surface than near the thermocline.