
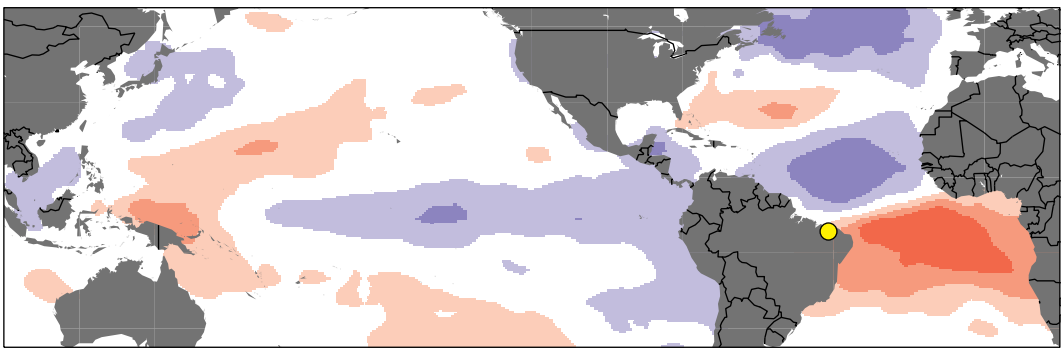

Figure 24. Correlation between average February through May precipitation in northeast Brazil (yellow dot) and sea surface temperature. Red (blue) shading indicates regions in which above-normal sea surface temperatures tend to be observed in conjunction with the above (below) normal rainfall in northeast Brazil. The strongest correlations are on the order of 0.7. Northeast Brazil rainfall tends to be more strongly correlated with Atlantic sea surface temperatures than with Pacific sea surface temperatures.